In twenty years from now, the hits from "Saturday Night Fever" will be "golden oldies," "Rocky Horror Picture Show" will be on the late show, and Jimmy Carter will be selling peanuts, again.

What will have become of "the burn out," "the nerd," and the kid who sat behind you in English class?

Will we see one of our classmates on Broadway or winning the Nobel Prize?

Will we remember our unusual experiences, unique memories, and special friends?
In 1881, Mr. Harrison, the original owner of Grey Towers, bought this land when it was the Rosedale Farm. When the old Rosedale Mansion was destroyed by fire, Mr. Harrison built Grey Towers. The castle, in construction for ten years, was finally completed in 1892. The famous Philadelphia architect, Horace Trumbauer, designed the structure after the historic Alnwick Castle in England, home of the Earls of Northumberland.
The cost of building Grey Towers was estimated at two million dollars and contained furnishings worth approximately five hundred thousand dollars. The exterior walls are believed to be constructed of native Chestnut Hill stone and hand dressed; as for the interior, all materials are imported from abroad.
