1973—students—we are all now we are a national phenomenon we are known to the nation as:
young people—our president radicals—the silent majority intellectuals—our teachers spoiled brats—Europeans little darlings—our parents regardless of what we are called we were heard
we have been known as a movement
we leave . . .
some will continue as students
some will work with the system . . .
some against . . .
whatever we do . . .
we will be involved . . .
we have affected the country as students
we are ready to leave our marks as women . . .
1974—women—we will be
i have "brought people alive for live people"—my students.

becoming "involved" usually implies the generous and unselfish giving of oneself for others or for a cause. I wonder how many people think of the utter loneliness that results from the refusal to accept responsibilities or obligations or some degree of involvement.

get involved... involve your mind, your body, and your total being. Physical education provides an opportunity for all to get involved, regardless of skill and capabilities. Get involved in physical activity... get involved in life.

involvement is essential to the understanding of art as well as to its creation. And though it has always been so the art of today emphasizes the act of being involved to the extent that many times all other qualities associated with art are eliminated, and just the bare statement of involvement remains. There is so much in our lives today in which we have no direct part, that to be involved, to know oneself involved, represents a special kind of triumph.

involvement on all scores for me involves the reversing of one (at least) spiritless dicke: i.e., learn and live. Involvement in my particular discipline—the study of Chaucer—means being all alive—oh and sap running up from evergreen roots.

oh child,
i would weep for you.
saw you stand in snow
star-deep last night,
heard you ask advice of trees,
saw tears freeze
crusting your cheeks,
and felt the cold sting
of ice rubbed on skin.
You exhausted the well
of sorrow
i had to give

i would lie
in the snow
beneath the trees
before i would take that life long walk
with you again

you are not a star.
you cannot dwell with stars,
do not live with trees:
you have no branches.
you!
live with men.
they have your covering.

alice platt
significant learning occurs when a person becomes deeply involved in his own learning process, i.e., when he becomes internally motivated to learn. In my dictionary, good teaching is synonymous with personal involvement with students and the attempt to cause students to become internally motivated—to become involved in their own learning.

"involvement" is a despicable word. It refers to a condition that is both good and bad (art, the both k.k.k.), both positive and negative (friendship, hostility), both an excuse and a reason for action, includes both egoism and altruism and relates, indifferently, people, things and processes. Its claims are arrogant, but its descriptive, explanatory and evaluative performance its low. Banish it.

involvement to me is at once selfish and unselfish. It is doing something that one wants to do, and yet at the same time benefiting some one or something else. In the area of foreign language instruction I find it to be a matter of stretching one’s mind to an understanding of people and their culture in different times and in different places.
